Background & Objectives

The ICC Arbitration Rules do offer dispute resolution procedures leading to a binding decision from a neutral arbitral tribunal, susceptible to enforcement pursuant to most domestic arbitration laws and international treaties such as the 1958 New York Convention. Nevertheless, for many years enforcement of a foreign arbitral award in China has been very challenging and in many cases not successful. But there are new positive developments and changes in law in China increase the chances no. This online training should provide the participants with the necessary knowledge how to use and arbitral clause in your contract and how to ensure enforcement in China.

The participants will have the possibility to raise questions at the end of the session. Active participation is explicitly welcome!
